Emily has experience in business and complex litigation, insurance litigation, class actions, and health law matters. She brings a unique combination of analytical precision, legal knowledge, and commitment to client success.

Emily clerked at the Los Angeles City Attorney's Office in the Business and Complex Litigation Division, where she played an instrumental role in co-drafting an opposition to class certification in a high-stakes case, leading to a favorable Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruling.

During law school, Emily fostered an appreciation for health law as a library research assistant, co-drafting a 50-state survey on tort immunity for nursing homes during COVID-19 and researching drug price fragmentation and decriminalization of entheogenic substances. She was the vice president of the Health Law Society, submissions editor for the Journal of Gender and Law, and a Law Fellow mentor while also participating in organizations like OUTLaw and If/When/How Students for Reproductive Justice. Emily also volunteered with UCLA's El Centro Legal Clinic, focusing on protecting students' First Amendment rights through survey research on school police surveillance.
